Acting on the recommendation of an inspection committee composed of City Engineer C. E. Rogers, City Building Inspector M. E. Kopp and City Attorney Frank E. Duncan the mayor and commissioners Tuesday accepted the new incinerating plant and authorized Auditor Mrs. Frank Pearson to draw a warrant for $25,000 payable to the Nye Odorous Crematory company. Funds for this project were provided by the last bond issue voted.

Acceptance of the incinerator depended on a 60-day test which had just been completed. This test period was provided for in the contract so the city would have ample opportunity to find whether the plant was as good as the crematory company claimed. The committee report shows the plant successfully passed both tests.

The incinerator built here about two years before the installation of the Nye plant broke down completely when it had been in operation but a few days, but the company had already received payment, and as the bonding company did not make reparation the city had no recourse. It was because of this costly experience of another administration that the present city officials insisted on a severe test and on withholding payment until the plant's efficiency had been conclusively demonstrated.

Conditions Sanitary.

Until the Nye plant was built and operated 40 days ago the city's garbage and trash were disposed of in a haphazard and unsatisfactory manner. The garbage contract was held by persons who collected it inefficiently, hauled it several miles and used it to fatten hogs. They were able to collect enough feed for their hogs in the downtown district where streets are thickly settled, with the result that hundreds of complaints were received by the city health department daily that the collectors had failed to visit the outlying districts where there are no hotels or restaurants and where the amount of garbage from each home is small.

Trash was collected in the same manner as it now is, hauled to the city dump and dumped. But the city dump was always an unsightly place. Numerous objections to its location were received by the city, and occasionally an injunction suit was filed by property owners to prevent its use. About the time the city felt the situation was relieved there was further trouble about the dump.

Since the new incinerating plant was finished and put into use, and the garbage collection equipment enlarged, there are days when not a single complaint reaches the health department. Occasionally as many as a half dozen complaints are heard in a day, but it is not often.

Consumers Everything.

Garbage and trash are now consumed in the new incinerating plant. With comparatively short hauls, and with a force of men ready to unload the garbage and trash wagons quickly, the collection service has been improved almost unbelievably, as is shown by the reduction in the number of complaints.

The new plant is virtually odorless and smokeless. One resident of the West Side complained the first of this week that an odor emanated from the incinerator, but an investigation disclosed it was caused by burning trash and trash on the incinerator grounds, which are being cleaned and which are to be beautified this spring.

Another resident of that section declared the incinerating plant was smoking "like a locomotive." It later discovered that he did not know the incinerator's location and that the smoke he saw came from the waterworks pump station.

The Nye Odorous Crematory company guaranteed the Tulsa plant would successfully dispose of 40 tons of garbage and trash every 24 hours. During the 60-day official test it has consumed more than 61 tons daily, or 21 tons more than was specified in the guarantee.

In addition to this tonnage it has cremated 25 dead horses, 7 cows, 115 dogs and 1 calf, the weight of which was not included in the report.

According to a check kept at the plant, there were 1,482 loads of trash that averaged 141-2 tons to the load, or 2,073 tons, and 578 loads of garbage averaging two tons to the load or 1,156 tons, making a total of 3,278 tons of trash and garbage. Averaged over the 60-day period, this shows the daily disposal to have been more than 51 tons.

Plant Is Economical.

The new plant is an economical one. No fuel is used except the trash, which when burned dries the garbage and furnishes sufficient fire to cremate it. The heat is so intense that tin cans after going through it may be crumpled in one hand. Garbage and trash are dumped into the furnaces through openings in the heavy floor above them. Dead animals are drawn into the fire by a windless and heavy chain.

P. L. Long, assistant superintendent of health, reported to the commission Tuesday that a number of squatters are on incinerator property, and that they throw tin cans and other refuse and trash over the ground. He was instructed to allow them to remain until April 1 because of the inclement weather and the fact that they have no other place to move.
